Women and the Health Care Law in California

The health care law, also known as the Affordable Care Act, protects women from discriminatory health insurance practices, makes health coverage more affordable and easier to obtain, and improves access to many of the health services women need. Approximately 13 million women will gain coverage because of the Affordable Care Act by 2016. Millions of women already benefit from the new law, and all women will gain important protections when the law is fully implemented in 2014.

Why Women Need the Health Care Law

Women face unfair and discriminatory insurance practices, such as being denied coverage or paying more for health insurance than men. At the same time, individual market health plans often exclude coverage for services that only women need like maternity care. In most states, women are routinely denied coverage because of pre-existing conditions such as having had a C-section, breast or cervical cancer, or receiving medical treatment for domestic or sexual violence.

- In California, too many women are uninsured, especially in communities of color. Approximately 2.8 million women, almost 24% of California women, were uninsured. The numbers are even higher for women of color. In California, almost 25% of black women and 35.3% of Hispanic women were uninsured compared to 14% of white women.2
- Women who are able to buy health insurance on the individual market often have to pay more than men for the same coverage, a practice known as gender rating.
- Individual market insurance plans often don’t cover all of the services women need. In California, only 14% of individual market plans cover maternity care.3

The Health Care Law is Already Helping Women and Their Families

Access to Health Coverage when families need it the most

- The law allows young adults to remain on their parents’ health insurance until age 26. Over 3.1 million young people across the country have gained insurance coverage through this part of the health care law. Approximately 435,000 young Californians have gained coverage thanks to the law.4
- Children with pre-existing conditions can no longer be denied health coverage. This provision is already helping 497,000 kids in California with pre-existing conditions access health care.5
- The law also guarantees that people who have coverage will be able to rely on it when they need it most. Health plans are no longer allowed to cancel health insurance policies or drop coverage when people become sick.
- The law prohibits lifetime limits on most benefits, ensuring that coverage doesn’t run out during a time of need. 4.5 million women in California no longer have a lifetime limit on their health coverage.6
Access to Preventive Care Without Cost-Sharing

- Health plans must now cover certain preventive services such as mammograms, flu shots, and colon cancer screenings at no additional out-of-pocket-costs such as co-payments.
- All new health plans must also cover certain women’s preventive services with no co-payments; these include the full range of FDA-approved contraception methods and contraceptive counseling, well-woman visits, screening for gestational diabetes, breastfeeding support, supplies, and counseling and domestic violence screening and counseling. An estimated 3 million women in California received preventive services without a co-payment in 2011 and 2012.

Insurance Reforms that Help Control Costs

- Health plans must offer an explanation when they increase premiums by more than 10%. Plans must post all explanations online and consumers must have a chance to comment on the rate increase.
- The health care law also reduces what women and families will have to pay for health care by capping out-of-pocket expenses.
- Nearly 9 million people in California are already seeing the effects of a federal requirement that insurance companies must spend 80-85% of premiums on health care, instead of on administrative costs and profits. Insurance companies that have not met this standard are required to provide rebates to consumers which totaled $74 million in California in 2012, with an average family rebate of $65.

New Benefits for Women with Medicare Coverage

- Nearly 1.8 million women with Medicare in California received preventive services at no additional cost in 2011.
- In 2012, almost 300,000 Medicare beneficiaries in California saved an average of $609 on prescription drugs as the new law has begun closing the so-called doughnut-hole in Medicare’s prescription drug benefit.

More Benefits and Protections are on the Way

Access to Coverage through Insurance Marketplaces

- By 2014, there will be a health insurance exchange up and running in California, where women can easily compare plans and shop for affordable, comprehensive health insurance coverage for themselves and their families. Nearly 929,000 women in California will be able to access tax credits to help them purchase coverage through the exchange.

Access to Coverage through Medicaid

- Starting in 2014, states will have the option to offer Medicaid coverage to all individuals with incomes below about $15,000 a year, and families earning less than about $30,000 a year (133% of the federal poverty line). The federal government will cover 100% of the cost of this coverage expansion in the first three years, phasing down to 90% in subsequent years.
• California was one of the first states to accept the federal money and begin expanding Medicaid eligibility. Up to 856,000 women in California will be newly insured once this coverage is fully implemented.

• When combined with other reforms in the ACA, this coverage expansion will reduce uninsurance in California by 39%.

• Women covered through Medicaid will receive a comprehensive set of health benefits, such as mammograms, preventive health screenings, and treatment for chronic conditions. Women and their families will have greater economic security—people with Medicaid coverage are less likely to ignore other bills or borrow money to pay medical expenses than people without health coverage.

• Estimates show that accepting the federal money and covering more people could save California $1.9 billion dollars in uncompensated care costs over the next ten years.

• Covering more people through Medicaid will also bring in $66.5 billion of federal funding into California, helping to keep hospitals open and available in local communities.

Services California Women Need

• Starting in 2014, all new health plans must cover a list essential health benefits including maternity and newborn care, mental health treatment, and pediatric services such as vision and dental care. Prior to the Affordable Care Act, no individual market plans in California covered maternity care.

Insurance Reforms that End Discriminatory Practices

• Starting in 2014, plans can no longer deny coverage to adults with pre-existing conditions. This means women will no longer be treated as a pre-existing condition and be denied insurance coverage for a history of pregnancy; having had a C-section; being a survivor of breast, or cervical cancer; or having received medical treatment for domestic or sexual violence.

• Starting no later than 2014, insurance companies will no longer be allowed to charge women and small employers with a predominantly-female workforce more for coverage, a practice known as gender rating.

7 Grandfathered plans do not have to cover the list of preventive services. Grandfathered plans are group plans that were created or individual plans that were purchased before March 23, 2010. A plan becomes “un-grandfathered” if it significantly cuts benefits, increases co-insurance, increases co-payments by the greater of medical inflation plus 15 percentage points or medical inflation plus $5, increases deductibles or out-of-pocket limits by greater than medical inflation plus 15 percentage points, decreases premium contributions by more than 5 percentage points, or adding or lowering annual limits. If a plan becomes “un—
“grandfathered” it will be required to cover the preventive services with no cost sharing. It is expected that most plans will lose their grandfathered status by 2019.
